Abstract

Global economic environment is changing rapidly in the last few decades; it is reflected in widening and intensifying international linkage in trade and finance. In 1991 Indian Government introduced a number of liberalizing measures including significant tariff reduction, introduction of current account convertibility, liberal set of rules for FDI, unification of exchange rate and so on. Obviously these policies have its own impact on various sectors. The liberalization mainly aims at pushing economic growth through economic reforms. As the nation marks its 25th anniversary of economic reforms in this year, in this paper I am trying to analyze whether the country had achieved economic growth in the post reform period than the pre reform period

Key words: Global economic reforms, FDI, liberalization, economic growth.
